

Selfless Love and the Struggle for Life

We are all connected to a divine light infused with consciousness. This light permeates and fills a significant part of the universe. It carries within it information, energy, and the potential for creation and life. Therefore, it is essential that we turn toward the entirety of existence with selfless love, for we are all parts of the same unity. We must approach ourselves with the same love, for we too were born from and created by this light.

The energies of selfless love always stand beside you, no matter what difficulties you may face. As a healing force, they help restore your soul and your heart whenever the struggles of life wound you. They understand why you had to pass through the realm of shadows, through the labyrinth of opposing forces of good and evil. When selfless love is present in your heart, the pure spirit within you and your natural, harmonious energies restore balance and work together with you toward the fulfillment of your future.

Selfless love is the bearer of the highest wisdom. From it flows a knowledge and understanding comparable to the wisdom of life's greatest teachers. These energies do not condemn but forgive, even when circumstances compel us to fight for survival. They do not choose conflict, but rather healing, upliftment, and understanding.

Those who have carried responsibility for others since childhood often endure profound struggles throughout their lives. It is important to respect their role and place, for they bear responsibility for the well-being of their families, loved ones, and communities. They use their abilities to help, to heal, and to serve others with selfless dedication.

Conflict, exclusion, the absence of love, discord, hatred, the desire to dominate others, and the loss of inner balance are all reflections of the soul's suffering. Such states distance a person from inner harmony and make it difficult to live a complete and meaningful life. Many people make wrong choices under the burdens of poverty, illness, or hopelessness. Often, it is not malice that guides them, but despair and the search for a way out.

True immortality is not connected to the body, but to the growth and evolution of the soul. It draws closer to those who choose goodness, love, knowledge, wisdom, and peace as the path of their lives.

Every life is precious and worthy of respect. Therefore, we must care for our loved ones and for ourselves as well. It is important to recognize how far struggle should go and where peace must be allowed to enter. Again and again, we must reflect upon the direction of our lives and recognize the resources and opportunities capable of leading us out of negative and burdensome circumstances.

Although on life's journey we may at times have to struggle for survival, the true strength of the soul lies not in the struggle itself, but in selfless love. Selfless love heals the wounds left by life's battles and guides a person back to inner peace and their original light. Those who preserve goodness in their hearts even through the most difficult times draw ever closer to the source of divine wisdom. Love not only elevates the individual, but also builds an invisible bridge between all souls, leading toward unity and harmony. Thus, the struggle for life can ultimately become a victory of love, shining on as an eternal light within the human heart.